Sr. Carlos Bascuñán
Jefe de Gabinete
Presidencia de la República

Estimado Carlos:

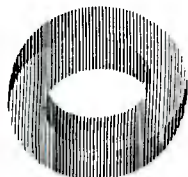

Te adjunto una invitación que recibió Alejandro para que el Presidente hable ante el Overseas Development Council en Washington. El organismo es prestigioso, pero dada la estrechez de tiempo ni Foxley ni los lobbyistas recomiendan que se acepte.

Segundo punto: ¿Se ha tomado una determinación final sobre la contratación de la empresa de relaciones públicas? Si es así, habría que informar a Akin Gump y quizá coordinar el mecanismo de pago con ellos. Posiblemente Marcelo pueda hacerlo durante su estadía en Washington.

Cordialmente,

Andrés Velasco

Dear Minister Foxley:

ODC wishes to extend an invitation to President Aylwin to address its Annual Convocation on U.S. Foreign Policy and Developing Countries during his visit to Washington in May. As the attached letter to the President explains, the ODC Convocation attracts as participants leaders from around the world to discuss critical foreign policy issues. We would be most honored if President Aylwin could join us.

I would be extremely grateful for any encouragement you might offer the President to consider accepting ODC's invitation. Thank you in advance for your help. I will call you shortly to answer any questions about ODC's convocation that you may have.

I look forward to talking with you soon.

Sincerely,

John W. Sewell
President

The Honorable Patricio Aylwin
President of Chile
Palacio de la Moneda
Santiago, Chile

Dear Mr. President:

I am writing to invite you to be a keynote speaker at the Overseas Development Council's Annual Convocation on U.S. Foreign Policy and Developing Countries on May 12-14, 1992, in Washington, D.C. We would be honored if you could offer us your perspective of Chile's political and economic challenges of the 1990s, and the role of external actors in the process.

ODC's Annual Convocations attract several hundred policymakers from the U.S. government, the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, corporations and financial institutions, academia, and private voluntary organizations. Keynote speakers at past convocations have included Michael Manley, Prime Minister of Jamaica, Michel Camdessus, Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, Paul Volcker, then-Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Sadako Ogata, UN High Commissioner for Refugees, James Robinson, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of American Express Company, U.S. Senator Richard Lugar, Manuel Camacho Solis, Regent of Mexico City, and Helmut Schmidt, Former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany. Reports from two past conferences are enclosed for your information.

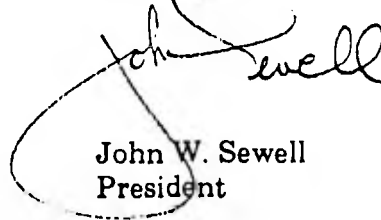

In this American election year, observers across the political spectrum conclude that having won the Cold War, the United States should now "come home". Domestic concerns--neglected in the preoccupation with confronting communism--clearly deserve priority. But in addressing these challenges the United States cannot ignore the world beyond its shores. ODC's Annual Convocation will address the question: How can America's foreign economic and political relations most effectively contribute to America's own strength?

ODC is the preeminent private institution in the United States for comprehensive analysis of the economic and political linkages between the United States and developing countries, including former socialist states. An annual report is enclosed for your review.

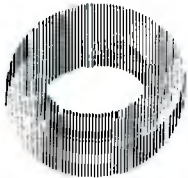

We anticipate a dynamic and exciting 1992 Annual Convocation with an audience of policymakers from across the political spectrum. They would benefit tremendously from hearing your views.

Sincerely,

Overseas Development Council's Annual Convocation on

U.S. Foreign Policy and Developing Countries: America First, America Abroad

Washington, D.C.
May 12-14, 1992

• unemployment • declining U.S. competitiveness • trade deficits • banking instability • environmental decay • energy dependence • drugs •
AIDS • immigration •

These crushing problems have a great deal in common: all are of pressing concern to the U.S. public; all affect the present and future health, security, and well-being of the United States and its citizens; all are global in nature; and all can only be effectively addressed with the cooperation of developing countries around the world.

In this election year, observers across the political spectrum conclude that having won the Cold War, the United States should now "come home". Domestic concerns--neglected in the preoccupation with confronting communism--clearly deserve priority. But in addressing these challenges the United States cannot ignore the world beyond its shores. ODC's Fourth Annual Convocation will address the question: How can America's foreign economic and political relations with developing countries most effectively contribute to America's own strength?

ODC's Annual Convocations on U.S. Foreign Policy and Developing Countries attract policymakers and analysts from the U.S. executive branch, Congress, international financial institutions, corporations and financial institutions, academia, private voluntary organizations, and the media. Participants at past Convocations have included:

Michael Manley, Prime Minister of Jamaica
Michel Camdessus, Managing Director of the IMF
Katharine Graham, Chairman, The Washington Post
Paul Volcker, then-Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board
James Robinson, Chairman and CEO of American Express
Sadako Ogata, U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees
Richard Lugar and Albert Gore, United States Senate, and Peter Jennings, ABC News Anchor

ODC is the preeminent private institution in the United States for comprehensive analysis of the economic and political issues of U.S.-Third World interdependence. The Council's programs focus on five broad policy areas: U.S. foreign policy and developing countries; international finance; international trade; development strategies and development cooperation; and environment and development. The Council's program is funded by foundations, corporations, and private individuals. Stephen J. Friedman is Chairman of ODC; John W. Sewell is the Council's President.
